Roosevelt Invokes Act of Neutrality Against Italy, Now on Cash, Carry Basis

F. D. R. Says Hand That Held Dagger Stuck It Into Neighbor

(By The Associated Press) Washington, June 11—Invoking the neutrality act against Italy, President Roosevelt held out to the embattled allies today an unguaranteed pledge of material and moral support from the United States.

A series of presidential proclamations last night which named Italy as a belligerent subject to "cash and carry" neutrality restrictions provided the official postscript to a strongly-worded pronouncement on foreign affairs by the Chief Executive.

The Italian government, Mr. Roosevelt said in an historic address at Charlottesville, Va., had rejected the opportunity for peaceful negotiations of its differences with France and England.

"The hand that held the dagger has struck it in the back of its neighbor," he added sternly, interpreting the sentence into his prepared manuscript.

The President delivered his speech to the graduating class of the University of Virginia—which included his son, Franklin J. Jr.—but to his immediate audience he added the nation and most of the world by radio.

Speaking forcefully and with unwonted emotion, he declared that the widening theater of Europe's war imperiled this country's way of life.

Future of America at Stake

"Once more," he exclaimed, "the future of the nation, the future of the American people is at stake."

Mr. Roosevelt summoned the United States to intensify its preparedness for "the task of any emergency and every defense."

An outside world "dominated by the philosophy of force," he said, would mean for the United States the "helpless nightmare of a people without freedom, a people lodged in prison, handcuffed, hungry, and fed through the bars from day to day by the contemptuous, un pitying masters of other continents."

"It is natural also that we should ask ourselves how now we can prevent the building of that prison and the placing of ourselves in the midst of it."

"Overwhelmingly we, as a nation, and this applies to all the other American nations, we are convinced that military and naval victory for the Gods of force and hate would endanger the institutions of democracy in the western world—and that equally, therefore, the whole of our sympathies lie with those nations which are giving their lifeblood in combat against those forces. . . .

"In our American unity, we will pursue two obvious and simultaneous courses:

"We will extend to the opponents of force the material resources of this nation and, at the same time, we will harness and speed up the use of those resources in order that we ourselves in the Americas may have equipment and training equal to the task of any emergency and every defense."

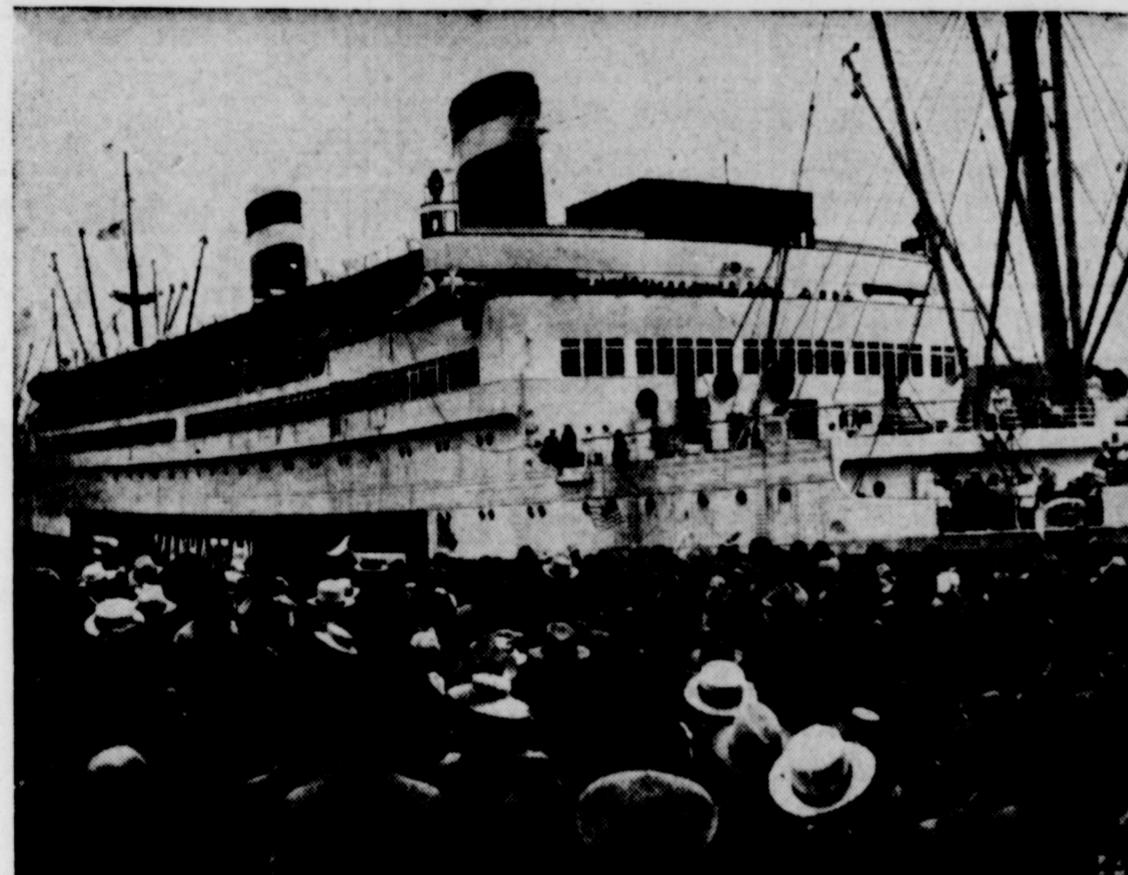

Official Reaction

The reaction of official Washington was that President Roosevelt had, in effect, served notice on the world that the United States was shifting its role of neutrality to one of non-belligerency.

Members of Congress who heard the President were either enthusiastic in their approval or apprehensive that the speech increased the danger of the nation being drawn into the war. Most of those who offered comments endorsed the stand Mr. Roosevelt took, but there were some who, like Rep. Rogers (R-Mass.), said "the speech sounded like a prelude to a declaration of war."

Ford Says Plane Output Is Easy

Manufacture of Craft Will Not Curtail Production in Automobile Plant

Detroit, June 11 (AP)—Mass production of high-speed pursuit planes for the United States army—at least 1,000 a day within six months—not only will be a simple task, Henry Ford said today, but they can be rolled off his assembly lines without interruption to normal output of automobiles.

The 76-year-old Ford made this assertion in an interview after he and his engineers had thoroughly inspected yesterday the type of plane the United States war department would be "most needed in an emergency." It was a Curtiss P-40, single-engined machine with a top speed of 367 miles an hour.

"But remember," said Ford, "who has held a life-long hatred of war, 'they are to be for defense only; they are the bargain all the way through.'

The first case on the calendar is that of Bernard Kozlowski who is charged with having exploded dynamite on Murray street endangering the lives of neighbors. Mr. Haver said a mental examination had been held and the report of the physicians had not yet been received and case was held pending the report.

Hungary and Balkans Stand Ready to Fight, But Hope Nations May Be Spared

Ankara, Turkey, June 11 (AP)—Soviet Russia holds the key to Turkey's fulfillment of her mutual assistance treaty with Great Britain and France, it was acknowledged in informed quarters today.

Turkey Prepares

Budapest, June 11 (AP)—Turkey, behind a mask of censorship, was believed preparing today to carry out her mutual aid pact with the allies, while Hungary and the Balkan nations stood to arms to await the first moves and reactions after Italy's entrance into the war.

The small nations of southeastern Europe clung precariously to their neutrality and expressed hope—not too strong—that they would be able to avoid war. Civilian populations tightened their belts in response to reinforced regulations designed to conserve food and supplies.

Turkey's reaction remained the most acute question. Fragmentary reports from Istanbul before wire communications were broken last night indicated the Ankara government intended to place the country on a war footing in readiness to oppose any Italian move in the Aegean region.

Greece anxiously watched for naval activities, fearing that because of her geographical position between Italy and Turkey, her peace might be threatened.

Eyes Toward Soviet

While all the Balkan states took heart from Premier Mussolini's statement excluding them from Italian war plans, at least for the present, officials and citizens throughout the Balkans turned their eyes toward Soviet Russia, whose program remained a question.

Yugoslavia and Bulgaria looked hopefully to Moscow as a powerful Slav big brother, but the others were apprehensive of possible Soviet designs—especially Rumania.

Magyarszeg, Budapest newspaper which often expressed the Hungarian government viewpoint, said editorially that "we follow with sympathetic understanding the motives which led up to Italy's great decision"—thus reflecting Hungary's close relationship to the axis powers.

In Bucharest, the Rumanian crown council arranged to review defense measures.

Reports from Sofia indicated that Bulgaria was relatively calm and counting upon Moscow's support in event of fresh war threats. Official Budapest joined the Yugoslavs in insisting that Italy's war even higher than their pre-war total.

Italy's 6 Capital Ships

In all, Italy has six capital ships, no aircraft carriers, seven modern heavy cruisers, 12 modern light cruisers, 106 ocean-going and coastal submarines and 75 high speed motor torpedo boats. New construction includes two more 35,000-ton battleships, 14 light cruisers and 23 submarines.

Germany started the war with two battleships, three pocket battleships, eight cruisers, 22 destroyers and 65 submarines. One pocket battleship, the Admiral Graf Spee was scuttled in Montevideo harbor. British estimates of Nazi submarine losses have run as high as 50, and the British have claimed German cruiser and destroyer strength reduced by more than one-half.

New German construction, some of which may now be in service, includes four battleships, two aircraft carriers, three heavy cruisers, four cruisers, an unstated number of destroyers and submarines.

Allies May Buy Shelves Resources Destroyers Into Fight

Germans Are Reported to Be Turning Out U-Boats in Semi-Mass Production

Trade-ins Likely

Further Trade-ins of U. S. Warplanes Are Thought Likely

Washington, June 11.—Reports that Germany was turning out submarines on a semi-mass production basis stirred allied interest today in the possibility of obtaining destroyers from the United States.

Naval circles heard that the Germans were concentrating on the construction of small submarines of 250 tons, which carry six torpedoes and have a cruising range of only 1,000 miles.

Authorities believe that the production rate is 12 to 20 a month.

Many of the U-boats are understood to have been built piecemeal in the interior of Germany and assembled at coastal points.

In view of this construction and British destroyer losses, it was learned, the British government would like to buy any destroyers that the United States Navy believes it can spare. Well-informed sources estimate that 25 to 35 British destroyers have been sunk and that more have been put out of action.

Canada Is Interested

Canada, too, is known to be interested in naval equipment, if not complete destroyers.

President Roosevelt's pledge of aid to the allies, voiced in his address last night at Charlottesville, Va., was weighed in the capital as a possible guide to the allies' chances of fulfilling their desires.

The United States Navy has 35 World War destroyers which have been out of active service since the middle 1920's.

Reliable sources said that further trade-ins of American warplanes to manufacturers, who could sell them to England and France, were even more imminent than the possible destroyer deal. The army, they said, is considering turning in 150 combat training planes in a manner similar to that by which 50 naval reserve planes already are reaching the allies.

New Taxes Are Levied by Cabinet, Rents and Prices, Salaries Fixed for War

Rome Is 'Open'

Military Command Goes Elsewhere to Prevent Raids on Rome

(By The Associated Press) Rome, June 11.—Italy marshaled all her imperial resources for war today as authoritative sources said Fascist troops, naval and air forces "undoubtedly are engaging" the allies.

New taxes—in some cases increases of 100 per cent—were levied by the cabinet in a one-hour session devoted to war legislation. Rents, prices and salaries were fixed to suppress speculation, assure stability and guarantee the army's purchasing power.

Punishments for crime were harshened—including death for all offenses formerly punishable by life imprisonment.

Supervision or sequestration of industrial and commercial establishments within Italian territory operated or largely controlled by enemy interests was provided by the royal decree issued by the cabinet after its session at 10 a.m. (4 a.m. E. S. T.) with Premier Mussolini.

To make Rome an open city—therefore not legally liable to air attack—the military command and offices of ministries directing the armed forces left the capital for "somewhere else."

But there were no direct reports that Italy had struck a blow.

A spokesman denied reports that Italian troops had invaded France last night but said he lacked information whether French territory had been entered since midnight.

(Residents along Spain's Mediterranean coast reported hearing gunfire which they presumed was from a battle between Italian warplanes and a British warship. All quiet, however, was reported directly by telephone from Gibraltar.)

Black Pall From Fires Near Paris

Despite German Reports Allied Circles Give No Hint of Catastrophic Slaughter

Tanks Near Paris French Admit German Tanks Reach Environs of Capital

(By The Associated Press)

Hitler's smashing offensive on the western front today reached "the vicinity of the Marne"—historic World War battleground where French Poilus stopped the Kaiser's onslaught in 1914—informed sources in Berlin reported.

Berlin also asserted Nazi legions had crossed the lower Seine—west of Paris—"at various places."

Amid these unconfirmed reports of sweeping German victories, the same sources in Berlin also claimed the "destruction" of two entire French armies in the great battle for Paris, now apparently fast nearing a climax, and said that mechanized German columns were speeding southward to slice France in half.

Nazis estimated the two French armies comprised between 4,000,000 and 5,000,000 men—apparently an extremely high figure, since the whole mobilized strength of France has been reported not much more than five million.

Only 1,500,000 French troops were believed engaged in the battle of France.

No Hint of Slaughter

There was no hint of any catastrophic slaughter in dispatches from either Paris or London. Both Allied capitals, in fact, have told of preponderantly huge German losses.

The French high command reported that Gen. Maxime Weygand's French armies had stemmed a tremendous Nazi "scythe" attack aimed at seizing the French capital from the rear, while Italy still masked her plan of attack as a full military partner of Germany.

"On the Alps front, our troops are in position and have not been attacked," said the French communiqué.

Berlin has estimated that 1,500,000 French Poilus are entrenched on France's southern front—along the low-lying maritime Alps—awaiting Italy's expected onslaught into the French Riviera.

At dawn, the beleaguered French capital presented a weird, dantesque appearance as acrid smoke from fires set by German incendiary bombs darkened the city like a pall.

Much of the population of 3,000,000, including all but a shell of the government, had fled. Civilians moved southward in streams. The capital's broad boulevards were almost deserted.

With the great battle for Paris beginning its seventh critical day, the German high command asserted that the right wing and center of the German armies "are relentlessly pursuing the defeated French armies."

A German military spokesman declared that the French capital was being "immediately threatened."

"No uniform French defense line any longer exists on the northern battlefield," the Nazi spokesman declared, but he gave no supporting details of fresh German gains.

London took renewed hope from President Roosevelt's pledge of full "material help" from the United States, and applauded Roosevelt's dramatic description of Italy's war declaration as a dagger plunge in the back of its neighbor.

So strong was the President's language that sources close to the administration said the United States obviously had abandoned neutrality and non-belligerency.

The French acknowledged that advanced German tanks had reached the environs of Paris, from which the government fled. However, the French claimed to have checked attempts of the powerful Nazi right flank, sweeping on Paris from the west, to advance beyond Seine river.

Cowardice and Treachery Great Britain officially called Italy's declaration of war an act of "cowardice and treachery."

Y.M.C.A. Stresses
Needs of Youth

The National Board of Y. M. C. A.'s, in a statement received by Robert L. Sisson, general secretary of the Kingston Y. M. C. A. focuses attention upon immediate and urgent needs of American youth, which concern the Y. M. C. A. Movement. The statement is being issued to presidents and secretaries of 1,200 local Associations in the United States.

Referring to political problems, citizenship and Americanism, the statement says: "Y. M. C. A.'s should take every opportunity to present to youth an affirmative interpretation of Americanism and of the responsibilities of citizens, seeking to enhance love of and faith in one's country and to encourage responsible participation as young citizens."

"Groups of young men in the Y. M. C. A. should be encouraged to keep in touch with organized movements of youth interested in social and political problems. It is not necessary that officers of the Y. M. C. A. agree with all the purposes or activities of these organizations, and members should on their part avoid giving the impression that their opinions are the opinions of the Association as a whole, but it is desirable that young people be encouraged to keep these contacts with each other."

Further, the belief is expressed that Y. M. C. A. leaders, without endorsing any other organization of youth or any merely general co-operative move, should maintain influential relationships with all important developments affecting young people. The Y. M. C. A.'s purpose, the statement said, is to help build a fundamentally Christian "social framework" for youth.

The impatience and captiousness that characterize many utterances about youth should find no support in our words or acts," the statement declares. "The fact that the youth problem has at times become a matter of politics and that there has been a good deal of public clamor about certain approaches should not divert serious-minded citizens, younger and older alike, from responsible attention to its various phases.

Leaders of the Y. M. C. A. and others in position to know the problems facing young people are under obligation to foster unbiased, earnest and expert attention to them."

Stressing both private and government-supported projects toward the standard of the best of the achievements of the N. Y. A. and the C. C. C. In local communities, schools, employers, employment services and agencies of youth guidance should collaborate in effecting integrated arrangements suited to the present necessities.

The Y. M. C. A. should cooperate as effectively as possible with the National Youth Administration in helping to provide work, recreation and education opportunities. It can also often aid Civilian Conservation Corps enrollees in re-adapting themselves to community life."

Speaking appreciatively of the quality of result and of leadership in other organizations and movements, the statement refers to the appraisal of the N. Y. A. made by Life magazine (April 15) which declared: "The good work of the N. Y. A. spread thin across the continent, is beginning to add up to an impressive attack upon the youth problem."

Declaring the Y. M. C. A.'s should know, the young people in their communities between the school-leaving age and 25, and take particular pains to learn about those who have not found employment the Board urges:

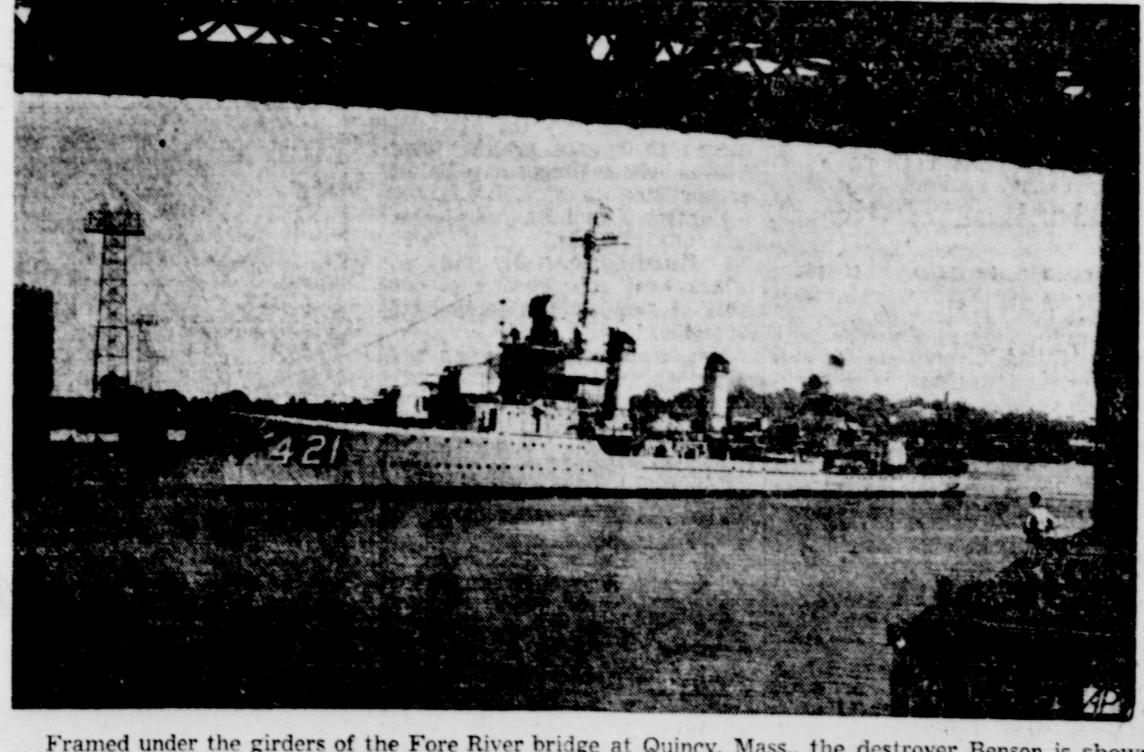

"The Y. M. C. A. should take an active part in whatever community-wide committee or council is trying to understand the problems of work, guidance, and activity for out-of-school youth and working to bring about suitable programs.

"The prime responsibility of the Y. M. C. A. the statement concludes, "is to help those whom it can enlist in its membership and its groups to learn to live healthy, sensitive, socially responsible, growing, Christian lives. To this task we should, with no apology, ourselves."

A million and a half young people, who have ordered their own lives and are devoting themselves partially to understanding the problems facing our country and the world and to supporting constructive solutions of these problems, would in itself be a contribution of the first order."

Cars in Collision

Shortly after 6 o'clock Monday evening the automobile driven by Dr. Mortimer B. Downer of Fair street and a truck driven by Edward Dermody of 72 Garden street, collided at Downs street and Bruyn avenue. No one was injured, but both machines were damaged. According to the police report there is a barricade erected on a WPA sewer project at that point which partially obscured view.

Allies Hold Lead In Naval Power

fleet with 15 capital ships, 17 heavy cruisers, 52 light cruisers, seven aircraft carriers, 179 destroyers, 57 submarines and miscellaneous craft totalling more than 1,390,000 tons.

Admitted British losses include a battleship, two cruisers, two aircraft carriers, 18 destroyers, seven submarines, as well as miscellaneous craft. The British also have admitted some battleships, cruisers and destroyers damaged; the Germans say many more have been sunk or damaged than London admits.

Building Warships

Despite these losses, the admiralty declared on June 8 that Britain was building warships faster than she was losing them and that at that time "the balance of naval strength in favor of the Allies is now far greater than at the outbreak of war."

At the war's start France had seven capital ships, one aircraft carrier, seven heavy cruisers, 12 other cruisers, 59 destroyers, 78 submarines, and miscellaneous craft.

The French have acknowledged the loss of one mine-laying cruiser, six destroyers, one supply ship, one patrol boat, one destroyer damaged seriously. New French construction, some of it presumably completed, includes four battleships, two aircraft carriers, three heavy cruisers and at least 16 destroyers.

In the air it is a different story. Germany was believed to have started the war with some 20,000 planes, half or more of them first line craft, and she is reported to be more than replacing her losses.

Lord Beaverbrook, British minister of airplane production, in a statement June 7 himself figured that the Germans then had 11,675 effective planes with 505 big troop transports.

Added to this tremendous air power now is Italy's total of some 6,000 to 8,000 planes, more than half of which are first line craft.

On the other side of the picture, the Allies probably had not more than 8,000—less than half Germany's total—when the Nazis launched their invasion of the low countries. The toll in planes on both sides has been high since then, the British claiming they were downing four German craft to every one lost.

The Allies, working desperately to overhaul Germany's air advantage, just now are swinging into mass production. They also are getting faster deliveries of American-made planes.

attention to the fact that the Italian press had taken no position regarding it.

It might be concluded, therefore, that it had created no particular impression in Italy, he said.

Italy threw her whole weight into the European war, after nine months of non-belligerency, under the eyes of her 70-year old king-emperor.

Just what sector she chose for beginning her battle against Great Britain and France, in an effort to make the Mediterranean truly "Mare Nostrum"—"Our Sea"—was not disclosed immediately.

ABSORBING THE IDLE

Enlistments in the U. S. Army, the Navy and Naval Reserve, the National Guard, and other official and unofficial military organizations, are naturally increasing nowadays. The foreign scare and the domestic flurry of armed preparedness naturally stimulate such movements.

It is evident that if the foreign situation grows much more alarming, we shall have a military draft law in this country, with men in large numbers enrolled for training. An Allied victory in France might delay this procedure, but would hardly prevent it. Our people, greatly shaken by recent world events, are obviously determined to make our country at least, and our hemisphere if possible, secure from invasion.

Any general enlistment would naturally absorb a good deal of unemployment in this country. Combined with the rising industrial production and employment, for purposes of rearmament and aid to the Allies, it might even bring our employment back to normal in another year or two.

STYLES FOR REFUGEES

One of the world's famous dressmaking establishments, Molyneaux of Paris, is doing an unusual kind of war service. As the child refugees from Belgium and northern France began to arrive in Paris their need of clothing was pitifully plain. Captain Molyneaux conceived the happy idea of making them suits and dresses from remnants of materials used in the regular dressmaking.

Employes of the firm liked the idea, and everybody, including saleswomen and models, went to work in their spare time. The shop is said to be humming with overtime activity, turning out smart clothing for frightened and homeless children.

Is it silly to make those youngsters fashionable costumes when anything to cover and warm them would doubtless be welcome? Perhaps. Yet a snappy linen or tweed suit, well-tailored knickers of flannel or serge, and charming dresses of pastel linens and cottons and gay prints may have a heartening effect on children and adults alike.

It was planned to open the new Senate House Museum on June 14.

Rabbi Aaron H. Lefkowitz of Temple Emanuel on Abeel street accepted a call to serve Temple Emanuel in Davenport, Iowa. He had served the local temple for the past year.

Funeral services for Calvin Forst were held from the late home on Grove street.

Uptown Business Men's Association was busy trying to have one of the new federal penitentiaries soon to be erected, built in Ulster county.

Funeral services for Eric Lindgren, victim of Kingston's first local aviation disaster, was held at the Conner funeral parlors on Fair street and was largely attended.

The lowest temperature recorded during the night by The Freeman thermometer was 60 degrees.

"In five years," says Harry Slattery, administrator, "the Rural Electrification Administration has financed the building—mainly through loans to cooperatives—of a quarter million miles of new rural power line, destined eventually to serve 750,000 farm families and other rural users—more than 2½ million farm people. And this," he continues, "is only part of the story. Private power companies, under the stimulus of the REA program, likewise stepped up their expansion of rural service. Today not 1 in 10, but 1 in 4 enjoys the convenience and the new incentive to better and more profitable production that low-cost electric power brings," he said.

WHAT! NO ICEBERGS?

The coast guard cutter Chelan that set out a few weeks ago to patrol the shipping lanes near the mouth of the St. Lawrence for menacing icebergs has returned to Boston because there weren't any. The single berg they found was not large and would soon disintegrate harmlessly.

The normal iceberg count is 140 in the month of May. The forty-year average for the whole season is 440.

Landlubbers will be puzzled that there are so few icebergs at the end of a winter exceptionally cold from Christmas on. They would like to know whether there is a scientific explanation and what it is. Was the North Atlantic so continuously cold this spring that the glaciers and floes from which the bergs usually break off didn't soften enough to permit it? Or maybe the icebergs were afraid of submarines. Then again, there's the chance that those Russian explorers who have been floating around the vicinity of the North Pole for a year or so corralled all the bergs for their own dark purposes.

IF NAZIS WIN

Certain that their lightning tactics will win, an American newspaper man reports from the "Czech grapevine," Nazi officials are openly speaking of surrender terms. "They boil down," he says, "to absolute domination of Central Europe, including some of France; several British colonies, including Central and South American bases; and most of the British fleet." That's the first bite.

Could the United States permit such an American invasion? How could we stop it? Here are questions to think over—and not at our leisure, either.

Europe will get our surplus crops and we'll get her surplus trouble.

THAT BODY OF YOURS

NATURAL RESISTANCE TO DISEASE

In taking the history of a patient who had consulted him for a general physical examination, the physician asked him about any previous illnesses.

"Well, I had a stomach ulcer a few years ago but I'm all right now. I had to take alkalis and I used a special diet for months."

The physician was astonished but said nothing till examination was completed.

"Well, you are the exception that proves the rule. I find your heart normal, your blood pressure normal, your circulation good, you have a wide body and appear to be a jovial individual with abounding health. Where there is or has been a stomach ulcer or duodenal ulcer (peptic ulcer) we usually find a slender individual, underweight, thin narrow body, low blood pressure, poor circulation and a more or less serious or even grouchy disposition. You are certainly an exception."

The patient smiled and said, "Just a minute, doctor. I had that stomach ulcer some years ago. I'm a broker and I was on the floor of the exchange during a depression and had to answer all telephone calls with excited, dispirited and angry clients. I was given that particular job because I was so strong physically, had an even temper, and an optimistic outlook. Those few weeks of trying to handle these clients prevented sleep and upset my digestion. I became so cross and ill tempered that I consulted my family physician and by the use of tests and X-rays, the peptic ulcer was discovered."

The physician was astonished but said nothing till examination was completed.

Pertinent Question Now Is What Would U. S. Do if Blitzkrieg Should Come; What Would Congress Do

By DAVID LAWRENCE

Washington, June 11—Would the United States government be able to fight against a "blitzkrieg" type of attack without a formal declaration of war? Would it be necessary for Congress to be assembled to debate a war resolution while enemy airplanes might be bombing either American cities or what Senator Vandenberg has significantly referred to as "outposts" of American defense?

These questions are pertinent now because wars are not declared in a formal sense, but happen overnight. Democracies are supposed to be at a disadvantage because they cannot move as quickly as dictatorships, but a close reading of the constitution of the United States will reveal that our forefathers wisely provided for just such a contingency as may arise this summer or this autumn or perhaps in the coming years of unsettled world conditions.

It is not generally realized, but there are at least two places in the constitution where military powers can be invoked without the necessity of a formal declaration of war. Section eight of article one says:

"The Congress shall have power. . . . To provide for calling the militia to execute the laws of the union, suppress insurrections and repel invasions."

In another part of the same section, the constitution says:

"The Congress shall have power. . . . To provide for the common defence. . . . To raise and support armies. . . . To provide and maintain a navy."

These provisions mean that Congress, as already requested by the President, may provide in advance for the summoning of the militia to active service. Another section of the constitution says:

"The President shall be commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several states when called into the actual service of the United States."

Thus the United States may never declare war on Germany or enter into a formal alliance with the Allies, but may proceed on the theory of repelling invasions. There is pending, for example, in Congress a resolution which sets forth that any attempt by a non-American power to occupy territory not now held by such a power in the western hemisphere would be an attack on America's vital interests. Once this resolution is passed, the commander-in-chief of the army and navy and militia could proceed to repel any invasion or attack on our interests.

Washington, June 10.—Gradually step by step America is drifting toward a state of defense which will be equivalent to a war basis. Instead of declaring war, Congress by a series of specific authorizations will empower the executive to defend the United States and its vital interests.

Whether the challenge will come overnight as a consequence of the fact that Canada may soon be the seat of the British empire and that the British fleet will be operated from Canada, or whether some overt act by Nazi fifth columnists will imperil American interests in the Caribbean or in the vicinity of the canal zone, the fact remains that American participation in some form in the worldwide struggle to preserve free government from sudden attacks by aggressors may be expected. To avoid a prolonged debate and to permit our armed forces to repel attack, authority will be sought from Congress to meet any act of undeclared war from any quarter.

Before the end of the present summer the whole policy of the United States toward active participation in the world conflict may change. Nobody can foretell the place at which the Nazis will begin their attempts to paralyze the American industrial production and to frustrate American help to the allies. If the allies are decisively beaten this summer, the American policy will nevertheless be one of vigorous preparation for an eventual challenge possibly a year or two hence. If, on the other hand, the allies show signs of holding out through the autumn, definite steps may be taken for the defense of the United States and its vital interests.

These are fateful moments which the whole government here realizes are shaping the history of mankind for centuries to come. There are still some groups who wish to debate national policy from a 1938 appeasement viewpoint, but the general drift is toward protection of American interests by using any effective means of keeping the war from coming over to this hemisphere. Aid to the allies will be increased and before very long compulsory military training will be authorized here together with authority to apply conscription.

America will hold her powder till she sees the whites of the enemies' eyes, but the demand of the nation, as reflected in manifestations of public opinion from coast to coast is to waste no time arguing about the need for the largest army, the largest navy and the largest air force that can be built in the shortest possible time. This means sacrifices on every side by every group and every party—concessions to the defense program which before the summer is over will overshadow everything else in the country as the nation reluctantly to go to war, prepares for sudden war on any front.

Are World's Best

BEN BELL

Uncle Sam's army airmen are still the best in the world, Benjamin Bell of 19 Chambers street, said today, prior to taking leave for Fort Totten, L. I., where he will resume his duties as a soldier after a three-day leave.

The 24-year-old Kingston youth, who joined the army last January, is a member of First Battalion Headquarters, 62nd Coast Artillery, Anti-Aircraft. He has just returned north following a stay of 10 weeks in the south where he took part in maneuvers in Texas and Louisiana.

U. S. army aviators handle planes in a manner which would be impossible to surpass, said this Kingston soldier, and when the nation gets more planes, it will have unbeatable air strength.

Young Bell, who before his enlistment, was a track team coach, indicated that he has gained much experience in the short time he has been a member of the regular army.

His phase of service, he said, put him in a position to see maneuvers on land and in the air. He was at Maxwell Field, Ala., for about a month where he was engaged in the Third Army Aircraft Warning Service.

During air maneuvers over five states, he said, 10,000 men were stationed as observers with each man positioned so that he kept observation vigilance over eight square miles of territory. Men of the American Legion in the five states assisted in this maneuver, he said, and their work proved of great value.

The branch of service in which he serves also includes what is known as a "record division." It is the duty of this unit to take photographs of shell bursts during target practice. The First Battalion Headquarters, he explained, in the event of combat, would be called upon to carry ammunition.

After finishing high school in this city, Bell devoted considerable time to assisting in coaching the school's track team. Then for four years he organized and coached track teams for the Kingston Recreation Department. He signed up with the regular army in Poughkeepsie, January 1.

Rome, June 11 (AP)—Premier Mussolini, as commander of the Italian army, today appointed Marshal Pietro Badoglio chief of the general staff in an order of the day calling on the armed forces to conquer.

Tours, France, June 11 (AP)—Anti-Italian demonstrations broke out at Lyon and Bordeaux today, while at Marseille 900 Italians were arrested during the night.

At Bordeaux, a crowd massed in front of the Italian consulate and broke several windows, shouting "Benito to the stake!"

Then the crowd moved on to the United States consulate where they sang the "Star Spangled Banner," "God Save the King" and "The Marseillaise."

Berlin, June 11 (AP)—Authorized sources said today that Germany would leave to Italy the task of replying to President Roosevelt's speech of last night criticizing Italy for her entry into the war on the side of Germany.

These sources said the speech revealed a new attitude except possibility chagrin over the result of efforts lasting months to find a common basis between Italy and the United States.

These efforts, it was asserted, were based on wrong assumptions.

London, June 11 (AP)—Approximately 700 Italians previously blacklisted for holding anti-British views were started toward internment camps today by Scotland Yard agents, who began a roundup of new fifth column suspects yesterday immediately after Italy's declaration of war.

These sources said the speech revealed a new attitude except possibility chagrin over the result of efforts lasting months to find a common basis between Italy and the United States.

Police said it would take several days to complete the questioning and classifying of the remainder of London's 7,000 Italian residents. Some of these are believed to have left London.

London, June 11 (AP)—Andre Maurois, noted French author now serving as French liaison officer with the British army, said here today that "if we can hold out until September we will have won this war" but help must come quickly to be left.

Maurois, who left Paris yesterday, said he had heard President Roosevelt's speech with great emotion but that help from the United States must come at once if it is to be effective.

It is not a question of speeches," Maurois said, "but a question of tanks and guns."

Bern, Switzerland, June 11 (AP)—Switzerland, now surrounded by warring nations, continued calm today, confident she could remain neutral.

The Swiss base this belief on the conviction that Switzerland would be more useful to France, Germany and Italy as a neutral than as an enemy, and confidence in Swiss fortifications, particularly in the mobilized citizen army.

Foreign observers declared that Switzerland is in greater danger of invasion now than before Italy entered the war, because, they said, of a possibility of a German move to outflank France's Maginot Line by invading Switzerland.

HIGH TIDE

By Frances Hanna

YESTERDAY: After Lenore finds him, Derek resigns from his job, feeling sure she won't be able to trace him to the Merriners. Jan suggests that he practice the piano until he gets another job.

Chapter 25 Blow-Up

TWICE now Derek had met Lenore at the Club, talked with her a few moments at the entrance, yet refused, unconditionally, to go inside with her. If he'd known that both Rose and Johnny saw him on both occasions, he would probably have told Jan about it himself. As it was, he thought it unnecessary to say anything to anyone.

Frankly, he was worried. Because if Lenore did find out where he lived, and with whom, she would undoubtedly make trouble. She was not taking his abandonment of her lightly. She was employing every means she knew to win him back, to intrigue his interest once more. He was not fool enough to think it impossible, either, even though he distrusted and disliked her. If she worried him, she was also healing the hurt in him, making his heart whole, for she had lost the power to shake his emotions.

Yet, Lenore was shrewd, and clever as well as beautiful and charming. In short, to insure his integrity, he wanted to put distance, plenty of it, between himself and her, but he did not want to leave the Merriners. He was caught, almost literally, "between the devil and the deep blue sea."

Rose, coming into the house to change clothes on this first glorious day of June, met Jan on the stairway and remarked carelessly, "Better watch Derek, darling. He's having heart trouble with a gorgeous blonde!"

Jan stopped. "What do you mean?"

"I've seen him a couple of times talking ardently to a girl at the Surf Club. I don't know who she is. I'll try to find out, if you want to know."

"I don't want to know. It's his business, isn't it?" She went on downstairs, her spirits leaden. Not, she assured herself, because of Derek and a girl, but because her prized sketches of Neptune had been returned this afternoon with a not too unsympathetically worded rejection slip.

She went out and sat on the porch with her small round chin cupped in her hands. Until the return of the sketches she hadn't quite realized how much she'd counted on selling them. And now...

She felt suddenly weary of trying to manage everybody and everything around her. Resentment, long supposed, began slowly to rise rebellious in her small body. Why should she have to carry the whole load alone?

Dinner that night seemed ill-omened. She burned her fingers painfully taking a pan of rolls from the oven; Lance remarked that Norma must be glad school was nearly over and she, taking it that he would be glad to be rid of her, jumped up from the table and fled in tears to her room, leaving her dinner untouched.

Jan, washing the dishes, was appalled beyond all control when Derek rushed into the kitchen with her sketches which she had left on a half table.

'Spineless Failure'

"THEY'RE marvelous, Jan!" he exclaimed. "Keep this up and you'll be famous. I knew you could do it!"

"Do what?" she asked crossly. "Earn a neat rejection slip?"

"Poof! One rejection means nothing, puss. You might get six rejections and still sell them for a cool thousand. I tell you they're good. I know what I'm talking about. You really have something here."

"If you think they're so marvelous, take them!" She pulled her burning, smarting fingers out of the dishwater and turned on him with gusty, violent temper. "You know a lot, don't you? You know too much for people like me. I'm sick of listening to your advice. Why should I listen to you? Who are you? You won't tell. You're ashamed. You won't do anything for yourself or for anybody else. You won't work and you won't try to make anything out of yourself or your life. You were right. I should have left you in the ocean that day—you aren't even good salvager! You're worthless, shiftless and completely irresponsible! You're entrenched in your tight little castle built of wounded ego and self-pity. You shirk your duty to yourself and to society. You don't belong here. Derek somebody or other!"

His face was as white and angry as hers. "What possible difference does it make to you what I am?" he demanded. "What do you care? What does it matter to you?"

Her eyes blazed like night fires through rain. "Because I tried to help you, because I had faith in you, because I hate spineless failures!" she declared and ran past him up the stairs to her room and slammed the door.

The anger died out of Derek's face. Consternation, amazement, wonder, took its place. He said, loudly: "Well, I'll be damned! So that's what she thinks of me!"

With the hypnotic intentness of a man in the grip of a grim determination, he strode in to the piano, his proud head lifted, his eyes brilliant with emotional rebirth. His fingers sought keys and a glorious, rushing flood of music filled the old house from cellar to rooftop. He played on and on with the hunger of a man breaking fast. It was as if a torrential sea of music deluged the house and its inmates, drowning out the pettiness of everyday troubles, breaking the bonds of little slaveries, sundering the chains of everything mundane, laying bare the inner spirit of all existence with the sheer, awful magnificence of sound.

He stopped playing as suddenly as he had begun.

"I have come back to me," he whispered in a tone of prayer. "At last I've found my soul!"

Still in a trance, not even seeing the white-faced huddled figure at the top of the stairs, Derek picked up the bundle of sketches and went out in the night.

Air Mail Letter

JAN woke late, sat up and peered from her window. The sky was overcast, gray, depressing. No sound disturbed the quiet of the house. The tin alarm clock announced the hour to be eight-forty. Either she'd forgotten to set the alarm, or it hadn't wakened her, she thought. At all events Norma must have prepared her own breakfast. Queer that Derek hadn't knocked on her door before now with a demand for food.

Suddenly she remembered their quarrel, and its aftermath. Reminded she hadn't heard him come in last night even though she'd lain awake hours, miserable and wretched and remorseful, repenting the horrid scene. She shouldn't have lost her temper and flared out at him like that. And she had been wrong. He had repudiated her accusation of failure by loosing a flood of vital, living tone. He had told her with his fingers of his recovery, of his gift reborn. He had been a conqueror playing his own triumphal march!

"I'll find him and apologize, with trimmings," she promised herself. She jumped out of bed, looking about twelve years old in her pink, flowered pajamas and tumbled curls. Neptune lifted his head to stare at her curiously.

Breakfast was not too imminent, and burrowed his nose once more under the plume curtain of his tail, keeping one eye open, however.

His mistress certainly appeared up about something this morning, he observed in his sphinx-like fashion. She seemed to be having a difficult time deciding what to put on. Much as he loved her, he thought her very foolish and feminine of late. Arising used to be a matter of jumping into those blue pants of hers, giving her hair a lick and a promise, dousing her face with cold water and hurrying to cook breakfast.

He sighed an inaudible cat sigh. Recently life had become increasingly difficult. She powdered and painted and fussed with her hair, and sometimes changed clothes two or three times before she was satisfied.

"Nippy," she said, tickling the fury white patch under his chin, "stop glaring at me like that, you fickle animal. This is the first time in weeks you've deigned to sleep on my bed. Didn't Derek leave you on the roof last night?"

On the way downstairs, sedately accompanied by the cat, Jan rehearsed her speech of apology. Going hesitantly into the kitchen she found it empty, everything neatly in place as she'd left it the night before. Norma must have taken her breakfast in a cafe. Maybe Derek was waiting on the roof for her call to breakfast.

But he was not on the roof and an examination of the tent showed his bed had not been slept in. Distressed, more worried than she would admit, she began the routine duties of another day, hoping he would turn up before long. He didn't.

Not until the afternoon mail brought an air mail letter postmarked San Francisco did she realize with raw sick terror, what had happened. For the letter was from Derek.

"Dear young mariner: You've done your penance, so I'm removing the albatross from round your neck. I'm en route to New York by plane, ready to storm the citadels. If I can do it you'll hear from me again, but not until I've abandoned my tight little castle of self-pity. I took your sketches for good luck. Thanks for everything, puss."

Derek the Salvaged

She read the bold, scrawling letter over and over until they began to bleed. Derek—gone!

There wasn't time for even a good cry. Lance rang for service and then there was marketing to do and dinner to prepare and dishes to wash. When it appeared she would at last find a moment alone, Johnny and Rose sought her out with disturbed and annoyed faces.

Couple Celebrates 60th Anniversary

A happy, and most unusual occasion, in the quiet Lake Hill district of the town of Woodstock, was the 60th wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. John Sickler. On June 6, 1880, on the farm now owned by Mr. Benneyan, John Sickler and Nellie Agnes Quack were united in marriage by the Rev. John G. Waters of the Wesleyan Church in Willow. Mrs. Sickler observed her 17th birthday on the day following her marriage, so the 60th celebration was a combination of those two events in her life.

The home, on Sickler Lane, was the mecca for a large number of relatives and friends on Friday, June 7. When the guests arrived they found the yard beautifully adorned with wild azaleas and spirea beside the customary flowers of the yard varieties. The house was also made beautiful with roses, lilies of the valley and baby's breath, and the inevitable festival and table decorations of most delicate shaded crepe paper.

At 7 o'clock a wedding dinner was served.

Following the dinner the Rev. Mr. Hudson, a former pastor of the Woodstock Methodist Churches, performed an anniversary wedding service, and Mrs. Sickler was presented with a wedding ring to replace the original one which she had the misfortune to lose a couple of years

The eighth grade school clubs and the club from the Myron J. Michael School celebrated an all-day rally at Camp Wendy, the Girl Scout camp at Wallkill, on Saturday. At 10:30 in the morning 90 girls were taken by bus to the camp. After a picnic luncheon the group was divided into six teams.

The contests of the day began with competing for the best originality in the selection of a yell and a name. After this contest the group enjoyed relays and competitive outdoor sports of all kinds. A baseball game was the high spot of the afternoon. Other events of the day included a scavenger hunt, a hot dog roast and a clean-up contest.

The day was brought to a close after supper by assembling the group and awarding the winning team a treat. An equally enjoyable return trip was made by bus.

The next "Y" program will be the week stay-at-home camp beginning July 8. All those interested in attending the camp should communicate with the "Y" office.

Cadets Are Told Nation in Peril

West Point, N. Y., June 11 (AP)—Lieut. Gen. Hugh A. Drum told the graduating class of the U. S. Military Academy today that "while we pray and hope to avoid the catastrophe of war, all of us must realize that our national life and welfare face precarious international conditions and influences."

"We must realize," he said, "that the world is infested today with professional international burglars, and at the same time that safety plans—defense schemes—locked in safes are of little value."

"These are times when the best of conceptions are valueless, even dangerous, unless the means of putting them into execution are not only immediately available, but organized, efficiently trained and coordinated for immediate employment."

General Drum, commanding the First Army and the Second Corps Area, welcomed the class of 450 cadets to the corps of command of the U. S. Army as the climax of West Point's commencement.

Dempsey Gets Few Parking Opinions

Although a week has elapsed since the common council invited the public of Kingston to express an opinion on the advisability of adopting a one-way traffic ordinance on Wall and Fair streets, between Main and North Front streets, but a dozen postcards have so far been received by City Clerk E. J. Dempsey.

The city clerk said today that all of the postcards received favored the adoption of the proposed ordinance, and that no postcards in opposition had so far been received.

At the council meeting earlier in the month Alderman Clarence Robertson, chairman of the traffic control committee, reported that the committee at that time would defer a report on the proposed ordinance.

He said that the committee believed that the public should be given a further opportunity to express an opinion, and urged that those who favored such an ordinance or disapproved it drop a postcard to the city clerk.

Cornell Favored as Crew To Beat Washington Shell In Regatta Next Tuesday

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., June 11 (P)—Washington's oarsmen were due here today for a final week of preparation for the intercollegiate regatta next Tuesday. And the chances are that if the huskies don't win Washington still will be the ruling power in the rowing world.

For two of the eastern contenders for the intercollegiate title—Cornell and Princeton—are coached by Washington graduates. So are Yale and Harvard, which don't row at Poughkeepsie, and some others. The consensus hereabouts is that if anyone beats the huskies this year it will be Cornell.

Under the guidance of Harrison Sanford and Norman Sonju, both Washington alumni, Cornell has become about the most potent rowing power in the east. The big red eight was fourth in last year's record-smashing varsity race then won the eastern "sprint" championship hands down this spring.

Arriving only Sunday, Cornell has shown Poughkeepsie observers plenty already. The Ithacans followed Wisconsin downstream yesterday when the Badgers went through a snappy time trial and while Sanford wouldn't admit he had timed his men, Cornell showed a good turn of speed to go with its acknowledged power. It is an exceptionally heavy boatload but it applies its power smoothly without a sign of wallowing or checking between strokes. This spring Cornell has beaten Syracuse, Navy, Princeton, Harvard and Yale at distances up to two miles.

Princeton Outside

Princeton, which has supported crews since 1872 but never before sent one to Poughkeepsie, is a rank outsider among the nine varieties. The Tigers had a rather dismal sprint season, beating only Navy. They appear light, and with no experience at rowing on the rough water that often turns up here they don't seem to have much chance in the four mile grind.

But Fred Spuh has been bringing them along carefully in an effort to develop power and stamina. Princeton is exceedingly smooth and had a smooth-running shell with fine spacing.

Ky Ebright, who has won more Poughkeepsie races than any other coach, dropped his 1939 champions a notch or two in the eyes of some observers when he made several shifts in his boatings yesterday. But that didn't seem to disturb the coach and the shifts may have been merely experimental. The Golden Bears took a licking from Washington this spring so Ebright knows what he's up against.

Dark Horses

Columbia and Syracuse may be the "dark horses" of the varsity race. Hubert Glendon's Lions had a successful sprint season and, as usual, they have been training here longer than any other crew. That long session with no distracting elements has been helpful to previous Columbia crews. Syracuse improved steadily through an unsuccessful season and its rowing here has looked good—perhaps even a little smoother than Columbia's.

Navy, which isn't due until tomorrow, can be judged only on its sprint record, and the midshipmen didn't win a race. Wisconsin has shown considerable improvement since its arrival but still doesn't look good enough.

Swim Tests Are Held at 'Y' Pool

Monday afternoon the following boys passed the Y. M. C. A. swim tests: Edward Weaver, Lawrence Decker, Joe Weaver, Louis Petramali, Charles Jennings, Henry Milling, Charles Watson, Jim Bendetta, Bill Stover, Paul Kaman, Gordon Constable, Marvin Schutt and Ronald Martin.

These tests were based on the following stunts: Passing "Y" beginners' test, sitting on the edge of the pool and diving in and watching other competent swimmers in action.

In an advance swimmers' test the Turtle Club test was successfully maneuvered by three boys, Jack Matthews, Marvin Schutt and Ronald Martin. The test included some 13 individual water stunts.

Tests are run in the Y. M. C. A. swimming pool every day except Friday. When each test is passed an emblem with a picture of the various type fish felt triangle is given to the swimmer for his work.

Central New York's dairy field day will be held at the state fairgrounds, Syracuse, on July 26 and 27.
